The Spirit clearly says that in later times some will abandon the faith and follow deceiving spirits and things taught by demons.

#deconstruction

the term to refer to another form of apostasy or departing from the faith, while others use it to describe the process of simply reassessing or rethinking one's faith.

look inside yourself and develop your own understanding

I can take some of those practices I do enjoy and find peace in, and not feel guilty about letting go of some of those that no longer align with my spirit

Without dogma, more people will be able to flourish spiritually

Deconstruction "encourages you to become the arbiter of what is true" and "the master of your faith," said Strachan. It denies the authority of God and his Word and promotes Self to the godlike task of curating your own personal religion

Dr. Owen Strachan, Senior Fellow with FRC's Center for Biblical Worldview.

Deconstruction is a careful and deliberate examination of one's beliefs from the inside. It's about coming to terms with what you believe outside of your inherited beliefs. It's about growing INTO your faith, not out of it.

Sure, there are instances when one's spiritual journey may lead them away from the faith altogether. However, that is certainly not the goal.

Deconstruction is a process of growth and maturation.

It is not necessary to throw the baby out with the bathwater as they say.

John Williamson

“When an evil spirit comes out of a man, it goes through arid places seeking rest and does not find it.

Then it says, ‘I will return to the house I left.’
When it arrives, it finds the house unoccupied, swept clean and put in order.

Then it goes and takes with it seven other spirits more wicked than itself, and they go in and live there.

And the final condition of that man is worse than the first.
That is how it will be with this wicked generation.”
